

After careful thought, I have concluded that doing away with the code element as a prerequisite for an amateur license is appropriate. Code is a valuable capability but does not indicate the minimum competence to operate in the ham bands or knowledge of safety or regulations governing use of the bands. Accordingly, it is, today, beyond the concern of the government whether a ham knows code.